

TEACHERS WHO SMOKE TERMED 'POOR SPORTS'

B. O. Skinner, State Educational Director, Speaks
On 'Teachers' Ethics'

ADDRESSES CROWD
Says Community Has
Right to Express Wishes

ATHENS, O., Oct. 30.—Cigarette-smoking and liquor-drinking school teachers who defy the communities they serve by way of their personal social relationships were tagged as "poor sports" here today by Beverly O. Skinner, state director of education.

Dr. Skinner's rebuke was delivered to hundreds of teachers gathered on the campus of Ohio University for the annual meeting of the Southeastern Ohio Teachers Association. His address, titled "Ethics for Ohio Teachers," was opened by the declaration that "teachers' ethics in Ohio don't function because Ohio teachers never read the code."

No one has a right to say that what he does outside of school is nobody's business," Dr. Skinner asserted.

IS CAREFUL
Although personally careful to make no statement of his own opinion of school teachers who smoke and drink, Dr. Skinner said every community has a right to have its wishes heeded by its teachers.

"I say to you teachers here that it is poor sportsmanship to accept money from a community and in return do those things of which the community disapproves," he said.

"If a teacher wants to smoke and drink she ought to go into communities where such practices are approved, or change her job."

"I am afraid most of us would have little sympathy for a teacher who fails to live up to the ideals of the community which pays the bill, and therefore loses her job."

Indicating he believes teachers need a clearly-stated code of ethics, Dr. Skinner suggested that the code be set up "to take care of some of the unethical practices of Ohio teachers."

ASKS MORE COURTEOUS
A call for more courteous teachers also was sounded by Dr. Skinner. "Hammering a little arithmetic into the heads of the pupils isn't enough," he said. "All teachers ought to recognize that the children, too, have certain rights."

In another part of his address he scored professional jealousy among teachers, defining jealousy as "the tribute inferiority pays to worth."

His final words cautioned teachers against asking credit for all they do.

"If some one steals your idea, let him have it. You'll have some more after while," he said.

TWO MINERS ARE RESCUED

Four Others Trapped Since Last Saturday in Mine Are Found Dead.

WILKES-BARRE, Pa. Oct. 30.—Two of six men trapped behind thousands of tons of rock and coal since Saturday night in the Macanaga mine of the West End coal company were brought out alive today.

The four other men were found dead.

One of the miners snatched from almost certain death was John Tomashinski, 40, of Shickadee, father of seven children. Joseph Molzoni, 22, of Macanaga, unmarried was the other survivor.

Those who perished in the blast were: John Molitoris, 35, Jacob Timus, 45, Henry Ceglarski, 23, Paul Novak, 40.

All were residents of Macanaga and all but Ceglarski were married. Molitoris is survived by his widow and three children; Timus by his widow and four children; and Novak by his widow who is in Europe.

First word that rescuers were nearing their goal was flashed to the surface at 6:25 o'clock this morning, about eight hours after the almost disastrous rescue.

It was not immediately learned whether the four men had perished from cold and exposure in the interior of the mine or had met instant death when a terrific blast jet of gas in the colliery nearly a week ago.

Tomashinski and Molzoni, who miraculously escaped death in the blast and survived the long hours of imprisonment in the damp black cavern, were reported in good condition despite their harrowing experience and to be suffering chiefly from thirst and hunger.

FESS IS STILL G. O. P. CHIEF

Peculiar Situation Appears In
That No One Desires Leadership of Party.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30.—The search for a new chairman of the Republican national committee, which has been pursued industriously for months, has come to an unsuccessful conclusion.

Senator Simon D. Fess of Ohio, who reluctantly accepted the post when it was found necessary to displace Claudius Huston, will reluctantly continue in it until the convention next June.

"Of course," he said today, "with the selection of candidates a manager for the campaign must then take over."

The situation regarding the chairmanship, unparalleled in party history, No one seems to want it.

Senator Fess frankly doesn't want the job. Party leaders frankly don't want him to have it. Yet conditions are such they cannot find a suitable successor and under the circumstances there is nothing left for them to do but to continue the Ohioan in the job.

It was pay-day for the first time since April.

From 14,000 mail boxes a flood of little slips of paper were sent to circulate among the teachers' important earnings.

Chicago's teachers, who are temporarily stay the arrears of pay, are of course, not the only ones in the city who are suffering from the financial crisis.

YUMA, ARIZ., Oct. 30.—Sheriff J. R. McPadden of Phoenix, Ariz., with his prisoner, Ruth Judd, confessed trunk slayer, arrived here at 9 a. m. mountain standard time.

Mrs. Judd appeared cheerful, and unfatigued by the tiresome night ride from Los Angeles.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., Oct. 30.—As Phoenix prepared today to receive Mrs. Winnie Ruth Judd, whose frenzied and mysterious love murder has torn its social, business and official life completely asunder, sensational elements surrounding the trunk murders began to be unraveled.

Hundreds of citizens gathered at the court house early today for a glimpse of the "Tiger Woman" accused of shooting to death her "dearest friends, Agnes Leroy, a nurse, and Hedwig Samuelson, a school teacher, and shipping their bodies in two trunks and a suitcase to Los Angeles Oct. 18.

EVIDENCE SHOWN

In rapid succession it was disclosed at the county attorney's office that:

1. Evidence gathered by investigators working under the direction of the county attorney point to an accomplice.

2. Lucille Moore, star state witness who stated she saw Jack J. Halloran, "Phoenix" playboy, wealthy lumberman, social civic and church leader, in affectionate embrace with Anne Leroy and Hedwig Samuelson, has fled from Arizona to avoid further publicity.

3. There is no evidence of any character which would indicate any one of the three principals were drug addicts or were in any way connected with the so-called powerful "Phoenix drug ring," which murdered two men, once a government narcotic squad secret service agent, two years ago.

4. A doctor and another woman may be implicated.

5. That suddenly, the necessity for an examination of the plumb-line.

Mrs. Edison Now Worth 40 Millions

WEST ORANGE, N. J., Oct. 30.—Mrs. Mina M. Edison, widow of Thomas A. Edison, emerged twenty-four hours after the probate of his will in the surrogate court in Newark yesterday as one of the richest women in New Jersey if not in the United States, through under his will she received no legacy.

Her wealth is variously estimated here as running between twenty-five and forty million dollars.

MANY GIFTS

Its chief source has been "gifts" bestowed upon her by her husband from his weekly checks for royalties and for the presidency of his various companies all through their forty-six years of married life. These weekly checks for a period of fourteen years are said to have averaged $25,000, giving Edison an annual income over this period of $1,300,000 or a total of $18,200,000.

This income was strictly cash and was only a part of the money that flowed into the inventor in the form of dividends from his various holdings, from his complete monopoly of the phonograph and moving picture for much of the two seventeen-year periods during which he held patents on their invention, and later for his membership in the General Film company, the organization which held such a complete monopoly on the moving picture industry that it was broken up under the Sherman anti-trust act.

Mrs. Edison today is one of the largest holders of capital stock in the Thomas A. Edison Co., Inc., whose surplus earnings are now rated at $7,000,000 but which in 1917 were rated at $150,000,000. She also owns large blocks of real estate in Manhattan, New Jersey, Florida and Madison, Wisconsin. Among her holdings in Manhattan is one hotel and two apartment buildings.

She also owns Glenmont, the beautiful 13-acre estate in Llewellyn Park, where she and her husband spent most of their married life. The property is valued at $10,000 an acre, the family admits, but you could not buy it for a quarter of a million, even in this depressed market.

KILLED FOR RUSSIAN FORTUNE IN JEWELS

Into the hands of Paul Federoff, superintendent of the vast Murinov estate, when the flames of revolution sweeping over Russia drew near his domain, old Alexis Murinov entrusted the casket containing the Murinov jewels. He knew that Federoff, if he lived and it became possible, would deliver them ultimately to any surviving heir of the Murinovs. He hoped they would go at last to his half-English granddaughter, Katherine Faring.

Within a round of the clock Alexis Murinov and his sons—who had remained on the estate after sending all their woman-kind, including Katherine, out of Russia—had been butchered, and their castle ransacked, plundered and burned. But in the meantime Paul Federoff had hidden the casket in a cavern where none could find it unless he gave the clue to its hiding place.

The splendor and fabulous value of the Murinov jewels were well-known to all Russians. They included the famous gems known as "The Czarna's Rubies," which had come into the family's possession as the gift of a former Czarna to one of her ladies in waiting, who was a Murinov.

Disappointed at their failure to find the jewels when they raided the castle, the revolutionists suspected Federoff as their custodian, but not by imprisonment or torture, or threats were they able to unseal his lips, and Federoff finally escaped from Russia and found refuge in England.

If old Alexis Murinov had known, when he entrusted the jewels to Federoff, of the series of tragedies that was to follow, perhaps he would have chosen to leave them to fall into the hands of the vandals, who sacked his palace. For Federoff was not forgotten by the revolutionists. He had been allowed to live only in the hope that his later movements might disclose the secret he had refused to reveal.

Ten years later Federoff, with the aid of Frank Severn, an Englishman who was a friend of Katherine Faring, successfully recovered the jewels and got them out of Russia and into hiding in England. Within a short time thereafter, Federoff was murdered.

This is an outline of merely the beginning of one of the most exciting novels ever written having the great Russian revolution as its background. From the time the casket reaches England, the story rushes through an amazing revelation of plotting and villainy that holds its readers spellbound to the starting and satisfying ending.

That means that the readers of The Herald have a treat in store for them, for "The Czarna's Rubies" by Sidney Warwick will be published in this paper as a daily serial story starting Saturday, Oct. 31. Don't miss a single installment of this stirring novel.

HOOVER IRED, ROAD ECONOMY ASKS APOLOGY IN OHIO ASKED

President Demands Officer of Navy League Retract Statement Against Him.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30.—The irritation that the navy has been causing President Hoover developed into a full-fledged rash today. Results may be far-reaching. It might even come to pass that Charles Francis Adams will resign as secretary of the navy.

Certainly, the President has thrown down the gauntlet for a finish fight through the news columns of the nation's press over relative merits of a "big" or "little" navy.

In an almost unprecedented statement, Mr. Hoover was on record as demanding a public apology from William H. Gardiner, president of the navy league, for saying he was "abysmally ignorant" about naval affairs.

A presidential commission is to be appointed to prove that Gardiner was uttering "untruths and distortions of fact" when he attacked the White House for trying to "reduce and to starve the United States navy." According to the Hoover pronouncement, even members of the navy league will be members of the absolving commission.

RURAL VOTERS ARE STUDYING 3-MILL LEVY

Deercreek, Perry, Monroe and Bloomfield Seek Additional School Fund

NEED IS IMPERATIVE
Voters Are Asked to Give Thought to Plan

Voters of three Pickaway-co townships and one corporation will give consideration to tax levies for school purposes at the election to be held Tuesday. The townships affected are Deercreek, Monroe, Perry and the South Bloomfield district.

The electors of the rural districts will vote on a continuation of the present additional three mills for operation of the school system.

Those who are active in the support of the proposed additional levy are pointing out some of the vital reasons why the levy should pass this year.

VALUES LOWER

With a reduction in real estate assessment values in the districts practically one-third of their former value, it is imperative that the school have this additional revenue to continue their program and keep the school in operation for the full 93 weeks.

Not only have the real estate values been dropped considerably but the revenue derived from personal property taxation will also undergo a decided cut, with the exemption of automobiles, household goods and other items from the list.

Even with the continuation of the three-mill levy and a slightly higher tax rate than last year, taxpayers will be favored when they pay their taxes and find the amount considerably less than in former years.

Even with the higher rate and the continuation of the present three mill additional levy, the local school boards will receive less money than last year and it was found necessary to cut budgets just as low as possible. Reduction in some salaries and a number of other economic measures have been made possible.

LEVY IS NEEDED

But, it is pointed out, if the additional levy does not carry, it will mean the loss of the much needed fund which will make it practically impossible to continue the schools for any length of time.

There is no question about the seriousness of the question and everyone who has the welfare of the needy districts at heart should work and vote for the additional levy.

ASTROLOGY AND MARRIAGE ARE EXPLAINED BY WRITER

... time in the life of almost every man, the question of marriage assumes major importance. Some will be married while quite young, others not until they reach the more mature ages, and still others will never get married. Astrology has an answer to each of the different times of marriage, and it gives the answer for those who wish to know about their chances of marriage. Whether or not and when you will be married depends on the relative positions of the planets at the moment of your birth. It has been found among many other things, that when the Sun and Saturn are in adverse position to each other, that that person who was born at that time will marry late in life or never marry at all. Of course this is only one of the many contributing causes of a late or no marriage but in this article it will only be possible to give you the dates of this one cause. Each birth chart or horoscope, say, the horoscope of each person is entirely different from any other person's chart and an astrologer who attempts to tell you entire past and future from the position of the Sun alone, in your chart or by taking the day and year of your birth only into consideration, is either ignorant of scientific astrology or is deliberately deceiving you. To give a correct reading of the horoscope of a person requires the knowledge of the exact minute of birth as well as the exact day, month, year and place of birth. Even twins have different horoscopes. Today there are several systems of finding the exact moment of birth and these are understood by only the best astrologers. But getting back to the marriage question we find that when there is an adverse aspect at both between the Sun and the planet Saturn, that that person is very discriminating in the choice of a mate. Some are even deterred not to get married. This is especially true in the case of females. Now here are some dates on which the Sun was in adverse aspect to Saturn so check up on your friends who might have been born at those times and see just how astrology works.

From April 21st to 27th and from July 23 to 27th, 1896.

May 2 to 8 and August 1 to 7, 1896.

What to have for dessert when the food allowance is closely budgeted is answered in part by the Bureau of Home Economics, U. S. Department of Agriculture, in its suggestion to serve that typical British dish, steamed suet pudding.

Or, to repeat a recent suggestion, that great American standby the apple, which is so abundant in many parts of the country and so cheap this year.

Like many other old fashioned dishes, steamed suet puddings are as simple as they are substantial. As the name indicates, suet is the shortening. This, in itself, tends to keep the price low. Flour, another inexpensive item, is an important ingredient. Many combinations of fresh, dried or cooked fruits may be used for flavoring puddings. Today's recipes call for raisins, apples, and dates. Ginger and lemon flavoring are introduced for two of the puddings.

So many variations are possible with puddings for dessert, the bureau's specialists in food preparation say, that they can be served frequently without fear of monotony. These puddings are sometimes steamed in a mold or rolled like a jelly roll and tied up in a cloth.

The pudding called "Black Cap" is well named because the raisins with which it is made always settle to the bottom of the mold, for the mixture is too thin to suspend them. When the pudding is turned out, upside down for serving, the fruit is clearly visible clustered in a black cap around the top.

The bureau suggests serving a clear cornstarch sauce with each pudding. Ginger sauce is the only one for which a recipe is given, because the others may be adapted from it. For lemon sauce the vanilla and ginger should be omitted and one to two tablespoons of lemon juice, and some of the grated rind should be substituted. The vanilla sauce is made like the ginger sauce, without the ginger.

There are other low cost desserts, the bureau points out, which are quite as appropriate for cold-weather serving as the suet puddings. While not so novel to American homemakers as the puddings there are a variety of dishes that can be made with apples. Among these are scalloped or baked apples, apple sauce, Brown Betty and apple tapioca. Nor should raw apples be overlooked.

Dried fruits, especially prunes and apricots, are likewise inexpensive. Bread puddings, rice puddings and smother cakes are all economical and filling. So also are gingerbread, and oatmeal and peanut butter cookies. Each of these cookie recipes cost very little to make and cookies are the more economical because it is practical to make up a large quantity at one baking.

All of the recipes mentioned are in the bureau's cook book "Aunt Sammy's Radio Recipes Revised," which may be had free of charge, upon request to the bureau or to the Office of Information, U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

METROPOLITAN DISTRICTS OF OHIO CONTROL POPULATION

COLUMBUS, O.—The metropolitan districts of Ohio, contain more than half the state's total population of 6,616,657, government census figures show.

Eight Ohio cities of more than 100,000 population each make up the metropolitan districts. Adjacent and contiguous territory in civil divisions having more than 150 inhabitants per square mile are included in the classification of "metropolitan district" in determining the size of the various cities.

These eight cities have a total of 3,795,783 inhabitants, the statistics reveal.

Cleveland leads the list with a population of 1,194,989. Its area is 310.20 square miles and the city has a density of 3852.3 persons per square mile, being surpassed only by New York and Chicago in the density of its population.

Cincinnati is the second largest city of the state, with a population of 759,464. In order of their size the rest follow: Youngstown, 364,560; Akron, 346,881; Toledo, 346,530; Columbus, 240,400; Dayton, 231,928; and Canton, 191,281.

The other six Ohio cities, their area and density of population are: Youngstown, 363.47 square miles, 1,003 persons; Akron, 242.78 square miles, 1,428 persons; Toledo, 204.36 square miles, 1695.7 persons; Columbus, 219.17 square miles, 1593.1 persons; Dayton, 180.12 square miles, 1398.7 persons, and Canton, 238.38 square miles and 802.2 persons.

Sales Tax
BACK in 1921 when the federal government, as it is now, was pumched for revenue, Senator Smoot sponsored and vigorously fought for the passage of one percent tax on all manufactures and producers' sales, exempting annual sales under $6,000 and sales of refined silver and gold. Senator Edge, of New Jersey, was one of its strong supporters. President Harding took the position that congress must choose between such a tax or no veterans' bonus. It was defeated through the combined opposition of organized labor, treasury opposition, the farm bloc and manufacturing interest. A year later the measure was revived with no better results. In spite of these two defeats Senator Reed, who has been advocating a general sales tax, is predicting the adoption of a modified sales tax by the next congress. He makes this prediction in the face of the opposition of Senator Watson, Republican leader, to tax revision of any sort. Nor does the opposition end there. All forces that combined against it 10 years ago will resist the forthcoming attempt, and they are forces that must be reckoned with.

Why all this fear of the sales tax? Of course the ultimate consumer will pay it, but doesn't he pay all the taxes now? Nor is the sales tax new. Sales taxes, under other names and guises, have long been a source of great revenue. In 1920, sales taxes produced more revenue than was realized from the income tax on corporations in 1916. The gasoline tax is a sales tax and it is not a trivial levy of one per cent by any means.

Menace of the Hoarder.

AMERICANS are the most bank-conscious people in the world, which means they have more confidence in banks and use them more than any other nation, and yet they allow a minor financial and business disturbance to terrorize them into withdrawing a billion dollars from the security of bank vaults to place it in the insecurity of cupboards and the old sock. Taking money out of regular channels and putting it in a hiding place to gather dust is known by the horrid name of hoarding. The anti-social character of the act is such that few who are guilty of it would care to be known as hoarders, the selfishness and the cowardice which the term implies. As a rule the hoarder simply does not realize the damage he does in rendering his money unproductive. He helps make a strong bank weak, contributes to a condition which forces banks to convert securities into cash, thus depressing the securities market, and industry. More financial institutions are wrecked by groundless hysteria than by their own weakness or by sudden deflation of their investments. At a time like the present it behooves all to strengthen rather than undermine the banking system.

SOLDIER PSYCHOANALYZED

BOSTON. — The American soldier is a poor routine worker, but always a good fighter today just as at the time of Cornwallis today. At Yorktown, according to Professor Robert E. Moody of the History department at Boston University's college of Liberal Arts, "Individualism is the cause of the American's good soldierly," says Professor Moody. "General Greene at Yorktown expressed the feeling when he said of his men, 'we fight, get beaten, rise, and fight again.'"

BLIND STUDENT'S GENIUS

DENVER. — Oddly perforated strips of paper are making it possible for Charles Falconi, blind student in Denver University, to secure an education. Falconi, blind since his ninth year, expects to become a lawyer soon. While listening to lectures Falconi is using perforated sheets of paper with a peculiar contrivance which he operates. Then he passes his sensitive fingers over the perforated paper and can repeat the lectures.

HIS LOTTERY COSTLY

HAVANA. — Is business bad? Ask Mr. Manuel Sanchez of Havana. He just gave away $13,500 cash on a $27 purchase. It happened this way: Sanchez thought he should do a little business promotion to pep up sales. So he gave away a lottery ticket with each dollar purchase. In checking up after the lottery drawing this week he found he had given away 27 tickets for the grand prize, each worth $500.

THE MYSTERY OF GERALDINE
by ANTHONY ABBOT
Copyright by SOVICI, FRIEDE, INC. — DISTRIBUTED BY KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

CHAPTER XLII.
A little after 3 o'clock that afternoon, 'X' arrived at the office of Doctor Maskell. I do not know what passed between those two, but it is not hard to guess. A woman came to Geraldine Foster with a pretended message, a summons from Doctor Maskell. She accompanied that woman, bringing the bottles which the doctor had requested—and thus was lured to her place of execution. It must have been something urgent to impress the mind of Geraldine Foster—so much so that she agreed to go with this stranger, carrying those bottles with her. In a private car they drove uptown. So much we know. Now we have to draw again upon our telepathic or deductive powers. 'X' and Geraldine entered the house. No sooner was the door closed than the woman made Geraldine sit down and wait. The woman went upstairs, taking the bottles. There she emptied them into the tub and turned the spigot on. But no identifiable thumb prints or finger prints show on the highly polished spigot. The woman had clearly put on gloves. "Now, this mysterious woman did an appalling thing—and for a highly practical reason. She took off every stitch of clothing and came downstairs naked, axe in hand. "Perhaps you have guessed why the murderer elected to do her awful deed while she herself was naked. There was a lot of blood flying through the dark air of this little house. Her clothes must not be spattered. So she was nude, and afterward she stood in the shower and washed herself. "Good God!" breathed Dougherty, crossing himself.

A Fiendish Crime.

"At the time exactly fixed by the battered wrist-watch, 'X', the blood-thirsty woman, without warning fell upon poor Geraldine Foster with the axe. The girl was literally hacked to death—probably not until after many blows was her skull crushed in. Her screams were unheard. There was a furious struggle. The room was dark. The murderer was not seen. But the blood was on the floor. The girl was dead. Geraldine was killed. "Lifting the still warm and bloody body, the naked murderer carried it upstairs and laid it on the bathroom floor. Crossing then to the upstairs bedroom because she heard a noise, 'X' encountered an apparition. A boy was looking in at her from the hall window. The room was dark. Identification was hardly possible. Nevertheless, someone had seen. Instantly the clever mind of this mad creature worked out the solution. The boy turned and fled, but the woman fell to work. The body would be stripped anyhow, for the soaking in the tub. But before burial 'X' would have dressed it again, had it not been for this accident. Instead, the body was buried nude, and if that boy ever testified, he would believe that it was Geraldine he saw, and not the murderer. "That was the reason Geraldine Foster was found nude, and her blood-soaked clothes found in the dark corner of the closet in Doctor Maskell's suite. The murderer put them there. She drove back to Washington Square and opened that office with Geraldine's key. She carried the clothes inside and played them where they would eventually be found, and hung the coat and purse conspicuously on a hook. Then she came out of the office, locked the door and was about to leave when suddenly—and here I guess—she remembered having left something inside. She had to wait until the doctor came before she came in—and she ran a fearful risk of recognition. The doctor, however, did not recognize her. He was dark and there was another reason for it. "But, my friends, the woman will be recognized. I found traces which led me to her by devices but certain steps. The first clue was a hair from a woman's head. I have it here."

From his desk drawer Thatcher Colt drew out two envelopes, both marked with the word "Hair." We watched with fascinated interest. The tale he told us had stirred us all deeply. Dougherty was the first to bend over the desk, his face washed free of all cheapness of jealousy, almost of all doubt, indeed, as he leaned on his elbows to see what Thatcher Colt had now to show. Natalie Maskell and her husband were keen and alert. Even Doctor Maskell stared from his deep lethargy, leaned forward and watched. "This first envelope," said Colt, holding it up, "contains a hair I took from the hair-net of Geraldine Foster the night I first visited her apartment. I kept it because I might need it if her body were found and identification proved difficult. This other hair I found on the floor where it had fallen from the head of the murderer, probably during the struggle. "Opening the second envelope, Colt drew out a long almost invisible strand of hair. It was of a medium blonde. The Murderer. "I may tell you," added the Commissioner, "that the murderer, if you look among all the possible suspects, you will not find the counterpart of this hair. But now I will show you a third exhibit." The silence was almost deafening in its effect as Thatcher Colt drew out a third envelope. Then from a lower, deeper drawer, he took out a long, thin glass tube on a low pedestal, a hydrostatic tube such as is used by chemists. It was filled with a colorless liquid. "Recently," explained Colt, "I managed by stealth to obtain several hairs from the head of the woman I suspect of killing Geraldine Foster. I took a leaf from her own book—I went to her own beauty parlor and bribed a girl there—just as she had gone to Doctor Maskell's barber, and obtained a cutting for an equal length. Here is one of her hairs—a dark and lovely auburn. But observe when I drop it into this chemical that the dye falls away."

We watched that demonstration in utter silence. The tiny strand of hair fell almost unseen into the chemical, and then the water became discolored. After a moment Thatcher Colt drew out the hair and dropped it across his sleeve and beside it he laid the one found on the scene of the crime. They were a perfect match. "Good God!" cried Dougherty again. "Who is this woman, Colt?" The Police Commissioner shrugged his shoulders. "Even such an identification as this might not convince a jury," he temporized. "But fortunately I found another. In the bathroom of Geraldine Foster—they had been fixed there in a crust by the tannic acid I had scarlet stains on it. They might have been taken for blood stains, but they were not. They were the stains of a lipstick. At some close to the department, I had those stains analyzed—a delicate and lengthy task—and I compared them with the dried pieces of lipstick taken from the lips of Geraldine Foster—they had been fixed there in a crust by the tannic acid I found that the lipstick used by Geraldine Foster was a Corday product, but the one used by the murderer was from Coty. George Maskell nodded his head tragically. "And you have found the Coty lipstick on the woman you suspect?" "I have," said Thatcher Colt. "I observed her stick one day when she dropped it in this very room." Natalie Maskell, rising, was pale as snow and smiling strangely. "Do you accuse me of murdering Geraldine Foster?" she cried. "I do," said Thatcher Colt. "And you did it with an axe because no one would connect a woman with such a weapon?" George Maskell struggled pathetically to his feet, an old and beaten man, and tried to take his stand beside his wife. Dougherty, too, stood up, staring unbelievably into the face of this calm woman, this banshee, scolding the rest of us, even in this hour of terrible disclosure. Doctor Maskell stared at her in horror, but she had eyes only for Thatcher Colt.

"I have sat here and listened, divining to what you were leading," she mocked. "But I have yet to hear the motive." "Your father-in-law has not long to live. He will bequeath millions of dollars to each of his two sons. But if one son dies, the other gets all. You wanted all. You are mad—money-mad," said Thatcher Colt, in solemn and accusing tones. She laughed balefully. "You are very clever, Mr. Colt," she cried, "but you must admit it was a pretty plan."

The Murderer.

"To have the State kill the man you wanted to get rid of? It is a clever, but not a new device." "Indeed? But you have not won, yet, Mr. Colt." And Natalie Maskell sat down and began to laugh, and to quiver, shaking her shoulders and quivering. Divining her terrible meaning, Thatcher Colt rushed to the medicine cabinet in his dressing room, while Humphrey Maskell sprang to the side of the woman who would have destroyed him. But she was already beyond the need of a doctor—and not one of us had noticed when she swallowed the poison tablet, half-way through Colt's explanation.

By the time Thatcher Colt returned, the murderer of Geraldine Foster lay, beautiful and unconscious, on the floor. An hour later she was dead. To the astonishment of all New York, on the following day Doctor Humphrey Maskell was suddenly released from the Tombs. The indictment against him was quashed, the case settled, and Dougherty made a handsome statement in which he completely exonerated the laughing physician of Washington Square.

The Next Victim.

Then, who did kill Geraldine Foster? howled the newspapers. "What is going on behind the scenes of the District Attorney's and the Police Commissioner's offices?" They never knew. The facts were rigidly withheld. They are given here now because the principals who would have suffered needlessly from the publication of the facts are beyond all harm. George Maskell, a broken man, has at last been laid in his grave, so placed until the last by the knowledge that the terrible crime of the woman he had trusted was never revealed.

The Next Victim.

As he went to her funeral, I could see by the look he fixed on the coffin that he realized the truth. If Natalie Maskell had succeeded in her terrible design, it would have been only a little while before her own husband would have been the next victim. Then all the money would have been hers. As it was, she was the first to be buried. Doctor Humphrey Maskell and the beautiful woman he loved are thousands of leagues from Washington Square today, married and happy, having obtained divorces in South America. With them are the old mother-in-law that Felise would desert, and little Doris, not so little any more. The husband of Felise and the wife of Maskell, who had stood between them and happiness, live on, without the power to molest them. But all this lay in the future that night. When all the others had gone and Thatcher Colt and I remained alone in the library of the Police Commissioner, I congratulated my chief, and he smiled a little sadly. "Tony," he confessed, "I feel lonesome tonight. Everybody has gone home except you and me—and a little girl waiting downstairs—Betty."

"Really?" "Will you two join me in a little supper—or would you rather be by yourselves?" We ate our supper, Betty and I, as the guests of Thatcher Colt in his little house on 70th St., and Betty would let me have only two glasses of the priceless port. She said that from then on she intended to manage me. And I've always found her a girl of her word.

marked with the word "Hair." We watched with fascinated interest. The tale he told us had stirred us all deeply. Dougherty was the first to bend over the desk, his face washed free of all cheapness of jealousy, almost of all doubt, indeed, as he leaned on his elbows to see what Thatcher Colt had now to show. Natalie Maskell and her husband were keen and alert. Even Doctor Maskell stared from his deep lethargy, leaned forward and watched. "This first envelope," said Colt, holding it up, "contains a hair I took from the hair-net of Geraldine Foster the night I first visited her apartment. I kept it because I might need it if her body were found and identification proved difficult. This other hair I found on the floor where it had fallen from the head of the murderer, probably during the struggle. "Opening the second envelope, Colt drew out a long almost invisible strand of hair. It was of a medium blonde. The Murderer. "I may tell you," added the Commissioner, "that the murderer, if you look among all the possible suspects, you will not find the counterpart of this hair. But now I will show you a third exhibit." The silence was almost deafening in its effect as Thatcher Colt drew out a third envelope. Then from a lower, deeper drawer, he took out a long, thin glass tube on a low pedestal, a hydrostatic tube such as is used by chemists. It was filled with a colorless liquid. "Recently," explained Colt, "I managed by stealth to obtain several hairs from the head of the woman I suspect of killing Geraldine Foster. I took a leaf from her own book—I went to her own beauty parlor and bribed a girl there—just as she had gone to Doctor Maskell's barber, and obtained a cutting for an equal length. Here is one of her hairs—a dark and lovely auburn. But observe when I drop it into this chemical that the dye falls away."

The Murderer.

We watched that demonstration in utter silence. The tiny strand of hair fell almost unseen into the chemical, and then the water became discolored. After a moment Thatcher Colt drew out the hair and dropped it across his sleeve and beside it he laid the one found on the scene of the crime. They were a perfect match. "Good God!" cried Dougherty again. "Who is this woman, Colt?" The Police Commissioner shrugged his shoulders. "Even such an identification as this might not convince a jury," he temporized. "But fortunately I found another. In the bathroom of Geraldine Foster—they had been fixed there in a crust by the tannic acid I had scarlet stains on it. They might have been taken for blood stains, but they were not. They were the stains of a lipstick. At some close to the department, I had those stains analyzed—a delicate and lengthy task—and I compared them with the dried pieces of lipstick taken from the lips of Geraldine Foster—they had been fixed there in a crust by the tannic acid I found that the lipstick used by Geraldine Foster was a Corday product, but the one used by the murderer was from Coty. George Maskell nodded his head tragically. "And you have found the Coty lipstick on the woman you suspect?" "I have," said Thatcher Colt. "I observed her stick one day when she dropped it in this very room." Natalie Maskell, rising, was pale as snow and smiling strangely. "Do you accuse me of murdering Geraldine Foster?" she cried. "I do," said Thatcher Colt. "And you did it with an axe because no one would connect a woman with such a weapon?" George Maskell struggled pathetically to his feet, an old and beaten man, and tried to take his stand beside his wife. Dougherty, too, stood up, staring unbelievably into the face of this calm woman, this banshee, scolding the rest of us, even in this hour of terrible disclosure. Doctor Maskell stared at her in horror, but she had eyes only for Thatcher Colt.

The Next Victim.

As he went to her funeral, I could see by the look he fixed on the coffin that he realized the truth. If Natalie Maskell had succeeded in her terrible design, it would have been only a little while before her own husband would have been the next victim. Then all the money would have been hers. AT THE GRAND

Every married woman in the world could write a novel on how to train a husband—and the chances are each one would be different. This is obvious because—barring a few generalities—all men have individual peculiarities. There is the methodical type, the whoopee boy, the clinging vine, the domineering brute—and so forth and so on. Each of these requires special handling, but will respond satisfactorily to proper treatment. However, the woman who deserves real sympathy is the one who tries to make her fat mate reduce. Transforming a character into a man because most men love to eat. There's an amusing sample of a woman's difficulties in the respect in "The Good Bad Girl," Columbia's drama showing at the Grand Theatre. The lady in question is Trixie Barnes, played by Marie Prevost. While not exactly a wife, Trixie has arrived near enough the marital state to serve as an example in the present instance. To be exact, she is the mistress of Paragon, the fat proprietor of a night club, and is seriously concerned over her lord and master's tendency to take on avoirdupois in spite of the fact that she is far from slim-like. She herself leans more than a little towards obesity.

Keep Baby's Milk in a Germ-Proof Temperature

In the Third Article of a Series on Infant Feeding, Dr. Copeland Stresses the Importance of Safe Milk—Avoid Window Sill and Cellar Refrigeration

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.
United States Senator from New York.
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

IN this series of articles on infant feeding, I have spoken about the different food elements necessary for health. I pointed out that cows' milk would be a very unsatisfactory substitute for human milk unless given special treatment. The treatment to which I refer is known to everybody as "modification." After this preparation the milk becomes suitable even for the most delicate baby. There are very few instances in which modified cows' milk upsets the digestion or interferes with the proper growth of the child.

It must be admitted that once in a great while there is met a peculiar resistance of the baby, so that cows' milk is not a proper food. In such event the doctor will make a "skin test," to determine positively whether the disturbance in the child's health is actually due to the milk or to some other cause. Perhaps you have heard about the giving of goats' milk. Because of the difficulty in getting this product, it would seem desirable to make certain that the baby's trouble is actually due to the cows' milk. If it is found to be, then it would be wise to change to goats' milk if breast feeding is impossible.

Even though there should be some slight disagreement, they are likely to disappear within a few days, or certainly within a few weeks. It does happen that a sensitive baby may have irritation of the skin or conjunctivitis, or a rash, or a change in the milk. Strange as it may seem, the only change necessary may be to get the milk of another cow, or by a change of the milk supply, to get the milk of a different herd of cattle. Your doctor will advise you about this. It may not be out of place to say that milk that has been frozen is not good to give a baby. I hope you will remember this when the cold weather begins. I shall not undertake to tell you why frozen milk is unsafe, but probably it is because of the physical effect of freezing upon the fat of milk. It is possible, too, that there may actually be a chemical change in the protein element of the cows' milk. Before I proceed further in discussing this matter of infant feeding, I must impress upon you once more the absolute necessity of giving the baby pure, clean milk. No matter how much such milk costs, you will save in doctors' bills far more than the extra expense. If you live in a city, under no circumstances give your baby what is known as "house milk," that is, milk that is brought in large cans. You must have the highest grade of bottled milk in order to be safe.

Dangers to Avoid
In this connection, too, keep in mind that after you have purchased the milk, or it has been delivered to your door, you must keep it in a cool place. You cannot trust to the window sill or the cellar. It must be kept in a refrigerator, and even then it must be a refrigerator so good that its temperature is maintained at 50 degrees or less. No matter how clean and pure the milk may be when it is delivered to you, it contains some germs which will multiply rapidly if the milk becomes warm. In an hour's time, certainly in a half-day's time, the number of bacteria or germs will multiply amazingly. Many cases of indigestion and other evidences of trouble can be traced to such milk.

"From her days as a toddler combing her childish curls, to her last phase as a bobbed-hair grandmother cosmetizing herself against the ravages of time the modern woman stands before the mirror 758 days throughout a 60-year lifetime," Mme. Rubinstein said.

COMFORT FOR COLICKY BABIES

... THROUGH CASTORIA'S GENTLE REGULATION
The best way to prevent colic, doctors say, is to avoid gas in stomach and bowels by keeping the entire intestinal tract open, free from waste. But remember this: a tiny baby's tender little organs cannot stand harsh treatment. They must be gently urged. This is just the time Castoria can help most. Castoria, you know, is made specially for babies and children. It is a pure vegetable preparation, perfectly harmless. It contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics. For years it has helped mothers through trying times with colicky babies and children suffering with digestive upsets, colds and fever. Keep genuine Castoria on hand, with the name:

LEGION BACKS OHIO PLAN FOR WELFARE

By unanimous vote of the delegates at the Ohio Department Convention in Cleveland, the Department Executive Committee was instructed to investigate the Bond Issue which the last Legislature provided as a method of relieving the desperate conditions now existing in Ohio's public institutions. The Executive Committee has acted upon the mandate of the Convention and has pledged the support of the Department of Ohio to the passage of this issue.

The last General Assembly made no appropriations for additional housing of inmates of Ohio institutions. In the eight State Hospitals for the Insane, there is a population of 2,000 over and above the proper capacity of these institutions. One hundred and twenty-five patients are waiting for admission to the Epileptic Hospital at Gallipolis. World War Veterans at the Ohio Soldiers and Sailors Home at Sandusky, now outnumber the veterans of other Wars and facilities must be provided for a 500 increase.

The Bond Issue, if passed, will provide for 1860 additional patients in insane hospitals; 1100 at Applefall Creek, 100 at Orient, 125 at Gallipolis, and betterments at penal and reformatory institutions, in addition to the new hospital at Sandusky for veterans.

The Ohio Penitentiary, which was built for 1800 prisoners now houses 4000. The five last year, which cost the lives of 322 prisoners, was the direct result of overcrowding and the situation was presented to the nation as a disgrace to Ohio. It is easy to forget, and the condition remains unchanged.

The American Legion, pledged to unselfish community service realizes the urgent need for immediate action to relieve existing conditions and every Post and every Legionnaire has been urged by Commander Herbert to get busy at once on an intensive campaign to create public sentiment in favor of passing the Bond Issue at the polls on November 3.

NO TAX INCREASE

The last General Assembly provided that a bond issue for $7,500,000 for additions and betterments in the department of public welfare be put before the voters this in insane hospitals; 1100 at Applefall

The resolution for the bond issue, as passed, provides that the bonds and interest on maturity shall be retired out of the general revenue fund and, inasmuch as the resolution provides that no bonds shall be retired prior to 1931, the next General Assembly, convening in 1933, will have to make appropriations to retire such bonds and interest as are matured in that biennium. There is no direct tax levy provided upon real or personal property of Ohio, and the approval of this issue can be considered as a mandate upon the next General Assembly to provide means of revenue for the retirement of the principal and payment of interest without taxing a direct levy upon real estate or personal property.

MISERABLE
According to the plans of the state welfare department, the $7,500,000 will be spent as follows: for actual housing and equipment for inmates, $3,820,000; for necessary units, such as power plants, wells, laundries, employees' quarters, bakeries, store-rooms, kitchens, dining rooms, etc., $1,860,000; and for fireproofing and general repairs and rehabilitation, $1,820,000.

NO BONDED INDEBTEDNESS
Ohio has no bonded indebtedness except a small balance due on the Ohio Soldiers' Bonus which will be paid in full this year. Within the past eight years the State of New York has twice acted to relieve similar conditions as these which face Ohio and has passed by overwhelming majorities, two issues of fifty millions each, for welfare institutions. Ohio must meet her responsibility and it must be done on November 3.

OTHER BENEFITS
There will be other benefits, as the money will be available at once and construction work will provide for additional employment. The Bond Issue will release demands now being made upon the State Board of Control and that body will be in position to grant the Legion request for additions and betterments at the Orphan's home at Xenia.

Atlantic Air Service Still Distant Prospect

Sir Arthur Witten Brown, First Man to Fly Ocean with Sir John Alcock, Says Trans-Atlantic Flights Are Still Stunts.

ALCOCK and BROWN AT COMPLETION OF FLIGHT

DRAMATIC END OF FIRST ATLANTIC FLIGHT

Asserting that trans-Atlantic air crossings will never become practical until a new type—in design and construction—of aircraft is developed, Sir Arthur Witten Brown, who flew the Atlantic in 1919 with Sir John Alcock, has admitted that he was wrong in his predictions of 12 years ago. At that time Sir Arthur prophesied that by 1930 trans-Atlantic flying would be but a routine matter. However, on landing at New York the other day, for a visit, the pioneer aviator declared that ocean flying is still a gamble, notwithstanding the rapid strides made by aviation in the last few years. Sir Arthur believes that with the present design and construction regular air service across the Atlantic will never be possible. The orthodox type of airplane has been developed to its highest point of efficiency and still it is not good enough, he declares.

GOING AROUND in WASHINGTON

By ROBERT S. ALLEN
International News Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON. —The untimely death of Senator Dwight Morrow brought to light two interesting stories about him, vividly revealing his courage and intellectual independence.

The first story is on the subject he had determined upon for his first speech in the Senate. The address was eagerly awaited. All through last session he was closely watched in anticipation of his maiden effort. He said nothing, and deliberately kept himself in the background, although behind the scenes he was very active and industrious.

But the December session to which he eagerly looked forward was to see his emergence. He proposed talking an active part in the floor battles. And his first topic was to be on the subject of Russian recognition. Senator Morrow firmly believed that the United States should officially recognize the Soviet government and that there should be stable business relations between them.

When Senator Borah early last session made his notable address urging Russian recognition the most attentive listener in the Senate chamber was Senator Morrow. When Borah finished Morrow came over and congratulated him.

"Senator," he said to the Foreign Relations Committee chairman, "if I were not a rookie here I'd take the floor right now and endorse everything you have said."

The second anecdote also relates to his work in the Senate last session. The farm relief question was being hotly debated. Progressives and Democrats were assailing what they charged was the inadequacy of the Administration's measures. One Progressive leader demanded the enactment of the debtors' bill.

He explained its operation and how it would give direct financial aid to the farmer.

Morrow took no part in the discussion but that evening when the Senate adjourned he walked to the Senate office building with the Progressive speaker. He brought up the question of the debtors' bill.

"If I were the President," Morrow said, "I'd give you people the debtors' bill. I believe it would help the farmer."

None will miss the kindly little man more than the children of Cuernavaca, Mexico, where he and Mrs. Morrow built a gracious, lovely villa to which they would go to get away from the cares and high altitude of Mexico City. The children eagerly looked forward to the week-end visits of the American ambassador. His presence meant sweets and cookies and tows.

And when he and Mrs. Morrow on Sunday afternoons would set out in their car for their return drive to the Capital they would wave them greeting and shake the strings of gorgeous red "Job's tears" beads they sold to tourists and cry, "Adiosito, Embajador adiosito." "Good-bye for a short time, Ambassador good-bye."

It was in the exquisite moon-filled garden of this little country villa that Lindbergh courted Anne and where they pledged their troth.

GOLD HIDDEN UNDER GROUND

France's Supply, Greatest in World, Is Found Under Streets of City.

PARIS, France, Oct. 30.—In one of the busiest thoroughfares in Paris, between the Rue de Valois and the Rue Croix de Petits Champs, buried under 96 feet of solid rock, are the impregnable vaults that house France's gold reserve—the richest treasure in Europe.

It is estimated that France now owns thirty per cent of the world's supply of the precious metal, its stock being second only to the gold owned by the United States, and in this age when gold is regarded as the life-blood of nations, France protects it as such.

Legends related in Paris about the stronghold wherein reposes the country's gold reserve are fantastic, but actually the truth is still more so; for the vaults are even more impregnable than the famous Verdun forts that withstood the continuous assaults of Germany's mightiest artillery and man-power of over four years.

The greatest secrecy surrounds the system of defense which protects the gigantic treasury, but in certain cases visitors are permitted to inspect the vaults under guard.

One can see the yellow ingots of bullion neatly stacked on steel shelves. They lie in piles of five, each ingot weighing twelve kilos (26.5 pounds) and estimated at 200,000 francs per ingot.

But that is all the visitor can see; gold and steel walls. The intricate system of defense remains a mystery to him, as it does to the rest of the world with the exception of a few engineers.

Access to the vaults is gained through steel doors, weighing eight tons each. Steel-walled corridors and winding staircases from a labyrinth that without the armed

Gridders Show New Fight, Beat Westerville

White Goes Over Twice In 13 To 0 Battle Thursday

An entirely new group of fighting Circleville high school gridgers under Coach Pete Herberholz won their first Central Buckeye League contest Thursday, Westerville high school was the victim. The score was 13-0 and if the Red and Black had not been the victim of several bad breaks the score would have easily reached 25. The game was played at Westerville.

For the first time this year a spirit of cooperation which is always vitally necessary for a victory could be observed in the ranks of the Tigers. We say Tigers because the Red and Black lads were deserving of the name Thursday afternoon, as they were fighting every minute. Coach Herberholz was jubilant after the contest and he was especially pleased over the new spirit of determination to fight which has been instilled among the gridmen.

HAD OPPOSITION

Just because the Herberholz-coached lads came home with a white-washin' victory is no reason to believe that they did not have opposition. The Westerville team under Wright Ballenger was also made up of scrappers and some brilliant offensive work was displayed by Don Schick, the full-back.

To get back to the facts of the game.

Jim Schick, a cousin of Don, sent the opening kick-off down to Circleville's 35 yard line. Paul Rooney returned the ball to almost the 50 but fumbled and it was recovered by Arthur of Westerville. Don Schick, or "number 18" as he was better known to most of Circleville's rooters then began to lead the ball and made a first down on the first play. Several line crashes failed to gain yardage and an incomplete pass forced Schick to attempt to kick but he fumbled and recovered. The ball went to Circleville as the Franklin-co boys had gone their "down limit". The ball was on the Red and Black 30-yard line and Hundley kicked to Westerville's 40. The pigskin was returned to Circleville's 30 by Jones, Westerville half. The rest of the quarter was nip and tuck with neither team gaining much headway, and the period ended with no score.

At the beginning of the second quarter Westerville took the ball on Circleville's 39 yard line and after several unsuccessful line crashes which failed to net yardage and an incomplete pass, Don Schick kicked to Merle Davis who returned the ball six yards. Circleville failed to gain here and was finally forced to kick again. However the kick this time proved to be beneficial. On the second play, Cain of the Ballenger-coached machine fumbled and Bill Robinson, Tiger tackle, recovered on the opponent's 29 yard line. On the next play Don White on an off-tackle play crashed through the entire Westerville squad and ran for a touchdown, the first score of the day. An attempt to make the extra point on a pass from Hundley to White failed.

HOLD ON GOOD

Circleville's line was given a real test in this period when the Westervilles advanced the ball as far as the Red and Black five yard line and were given four downs to push it over, but failed in every attempt. The Red and Black line led by Bill Hegele held like a strong wall and cheated the opposition out of its best chance of the day to score. The Ballenger-coached machine during the rest of the day never advanced the ball any farther than the 20-yard line. The half ended 6-0.

Although Westerville failed to gain yardage enough in the third quarter to score, its defensive also held the locals' scoreless. Bob Hundley, Dean White and Merle Davis carried the brunt of attack for most of the Red and Black's concerted attempts in the third session, but this period appeared to be mostly a punting duel between Hundley and Schick. Funny as it might appear to be, both teams netted a large amount of yardage during this session, but couldn't obtain enough at one time to advance close enough to the goal line.

At the beginning of the last period the ball was again the property of the Red and Black opponents and Capt Schick was using passing plays. One of these passes got off its course and alighted in the hands of Bob Hundley. This resulted in the Red and Black's next touchdown. With White and Hundley driving harder than at any other time during the game the pig-skin was quickly advanced toward the goal line and White carried it over on an off-tackle crash. Bob Hundley had easy sailing accounting for the extra point. He went through the Westerville line without being touched.

Summing up actual facts of the game Circleville outplayed the Westervilles in every respect. Coach Herberholz' boys gained 267 yards from the line of scrimmage as compared to 101 for the opposition, and also completed four out of seven passes tried as to three out of nine for the opponents.

Bob Hundley was appointed acting captain before the game by Coach Herberholz to replace Albert Hoffman who has dropped from the squad.

As to "star players," so to speak, in the game, not one word can be said about one Red and Black gridman than can't be said about another. Each and every member played his part and is deserving of credit. Capt. Hundley and Dean White with their concerted driving efforts helped greatly.

Next week the Red and Black will travel to Delaware where it will participate in another Central Buckeye League.

BERLIN. — "Card-gambling as an amusement for jobless" is the slogan which induced the borough of Kreuzberg in Berlin to place tables and chairs on the grass of the "Kreuzberg," a hill 250 feet high. Hundreds of jobless are gathering there, trying to forget their sorrows by playing "Skat," the German national card-game. An unusually warm fall supports these meetings.

Another forward-passing ace is winning Big Ten fame with Ohio State this fall. The newcomer, Carl Cramm, sophomore quarterback, former Dayton prep star, is a triple threat and his generalship is held in high esteem by Indiana, which meets the Buckeyes at Bloomington Saturday.

INDIANA GAME DEPENDS UPON FRAME OF MIND, FESLER SAYS

Failure to Consider Opponents Seriously May Spoil Defeat But if Ohio Team Can Be 'Natural' a Victory is in the Offing, Writer Expresses.

By WESLEY FESLER
Written Exclusively for International News Service and the Herald
COLUMBUS, O., Oct. 30.—The chances of Ohio State against the University of Indiana in their gridiron battle Saturday depends upon the mental attitude of the Buckeyes.

If the Ohio team is awake mentally and plays the brand of football it is capable of, it will defeat Indiana. If the Buckeyes are not in the right mental condition for this game, they will have one of the hardest battles on their hands they have ever had.

In other words, Indiana will be just as good Saturday as Ohio will let them be.

Up to date, the Indiana team has been undefeated in the Big Ten. The Hoosiers "took" Chicago very decisively and came out of the Iowa game with a scoreless tie.

The Buckeye's record is not quite as good, but it must be remembered that the Ohioans have played two "little contenders," while Indiana has played two of the weaker teams.

Football critics are favoring Ohio to be on the top by an impressive margin when the final whistle blows. And they will be if they are not taking things too much for granted and treating the Hoosier outfit as a push-over. If they do, they will get the biggest surprise of their young lives.

I hope the Bucks will profit by the big mistake that the 1929 Ohio

INDIANA FEARS HIM

CONSPIRACY TO BRIBE BIG TEN STARS TO 'THROW GAME' HEARD

Captain and Best Players of Minnesota Team Receive Letters Asking Them to 'Lay Down' to Permit Wisconsin to Win Important League Tilt.

MINNEAPOLIS, Oct. 30.—A night-swept conspiracy to bribe three players to "throw" a game, created postal authorities today as they pondered over the question: "Is it a plot, a stunt or a joke?"

The unusual bribe-attempt was brought to light when three identical notes, signed by A. W. Buzak, were received in the mails by three members of the Gopher gridiron squad, offering them $5,000 each, if they would promise to "lay down" in their game with the University of Wisconsin Saturday.

The three Minnesota players who received the letters are Captain, Clarence Munn, Jack Manders and Kenneth MacDougall. They brought the notes immediately to the attention of Coach Fritz Crisler who said he would turn them over to the postal authorities.

Three theories prevailed on the campus regarding the source of the letters. Coach Crisler, as well as the three targets of the bribe plot, held that the notes were the work of a practical joker.

A second theory was that the notes were written by a Gopher partisan for the purpose of injecting a fighting spirit into the Minnesota team for the crucial Wisconsin contest which will have an important bearing on the big ten conference race because both teams have thus far been unbeaten. This theory was upheld at Madison, Wis., by Coach Glenn Thistlethwaite of the Wisconsin team.

The third theory attributed the mysterious letters to the efforts of a gambling syndicate to insure the outcome of the game in such a manner as to realize on their bets.

The contents of the three letters were: "Dear friend: If you will do your best to throw the game away to the Badgers this coming Saturday and provided that the Badgers win, I will present you with $5,000 in bills. The money will be in your possession late Saturday night. You do not have to answer this letter but let your mind wander to the thought of money instead of glory."

Immediately after perusing the letters, which were written on the stationery of a Madison hotel, Coach Crisler launched an attempt to trace the author. He telephoned the hotel only to be informed that no "W. Buzak" had been registered there. Then, he expressed doubt as to the validity of the letters.

"It looks like the work of some demented person," the coach said. "It's too ridiculous to warrant serious attention and, anyway, we are too busy getting ready for the Wisconsin game."

Adding to the incredulity with which the "plot" was greeted, a local newspaper man reported receiving a letter, signed by the same "W. Buzak" offering the writer $2,500 if he would "work up" the Minnesota team in his newspaper in order to install them as favorites. The letter said that a $50,000 betting coup had been formed on the game.

To The Voters Of Pickaway Co. FINAL WARNING!

An attempt to change text books in Pickaway County is being made now. Why? Four days after M. S. Cox was made County Superintendent he recommended the change of fourteen (14) text books in Pickaway County. The County Board voted to change twelve books recommended by the County Superintendent. The vote on these changes was three yes, two no. C. C. Heffner, now up for re-election voted YES, as did Barch and Meyers. Hoover and Marion voted NO. All of these fourteen text books are published by the American Book Company, Cincinnati.

It is rumored that additional changes are to be made next year if Mr. Heffner is re-elected.

A letter of "greeting" sent out by the County Superintendent, "begs the support and EXPECTS the sincere co-operation of all the teachers in Pickaway County.

In this "greeting" letter the first paragraph reads: "At a regular meeting of the County Board of Education held August 5th, 1931, the need of a new set of text books of recent copyright for the elementary school of the county was discussed by the County Board of Education at the suggestion of the County Superintendent under Section 7706-2 of the School Laws of Ohio."

Why the hurry? During these four days, or any other time, not a single teacher, or Board of Education had been consulted about any needed text book changes in Pickaway County. In Vinton County, 41 of the 44 elementary text books adopted, are published by the American Book Company.

Is Pickaway to take its place by the educational side of Vinton?

Mr. Heffner supported these changes and should be defeated.

Mr. Young and Mr. Dick pledge themselves to stop this wholesale change of text books. Vote for these men and thereby vote for the children and their parents in this time of depression. Why not economize on text books where the cost hurts the people who are trying to make a living?

SIXTY ATTEND LEGION AUXILIARY PARTY
Entering the dimly lighted auditorium of the Memorial Hall for a merry Halloween party, Thursday evening, the members of the American Legion and the Auxiliary were given a cool reception by a ghost with a cold, shiny hand. The hall was decorated in pumpkin faces, fodder, black cats, and witches, with a camp in one corner of the room, where a gypsy fortune teller read futures. Members of the drum corps arrived as bonnie lassies, lunch backs, dukes and many other comical characters, entertained the crowd with music. Betty Cooper entertained with dancing and Bob-bett played the banjo. S. C. Barton from a West Virginia post gave a very amusing performance. Mrs. Alexander, suing in New York for a divorce, says her husband spends all of his time with flax-haired women.

If you want to convert a nation don't bother about the man in the street. Capture a score of first rate minds, and as the Americans say, they will put it across for you in time.—Sir Charles Robertson.

America's Riviera
California is often spoken of as the American Riviera because its climate and scenery resemble those of the Riviera. There is also a similarity in the nature of their products.

guide at one's elbow would prove impossible of negotiation.

Officials of the Banque de France claim that should a riot occur in Paris, the bank would be in a position to go into a state of siege and resist all attacks for several weeks. In less than half an hour all the institutions executives and employees would be in the vaults were emergency offices are ready to receive them. Here the staff could be housed and fed. Provisions are always kept stocked and kitchens are in readiness for the preparation of meals. Sleeping accommodation is also provided for.

ing and cresspool at the "desert murder palace" to find the missing organs from Miss Samuelson's terribly mutilated body caused a detail of deputy sheriffs, plumbers and laborers to be placed at work on this phase of the case immediately.

CHECK ANGLES
While these and other ramifications, which have authorities admittedly guessing, were being checked from every angle, J. J. "Jack" Halloran, the rich lumberman and club leader, over whose attentions the murders were claimed in some quarters to have been committed, stood almost boastfully before officials of the community chest at a luncheon and promised to lead his industrial division far over the top before the campaign reached the halfway mark.

The investigating forces of both the county attorney and the sheriff's office were ordered to concentrate their investigations on the theory that Mrs. Judd had an accomplice.

bomb as yet devised is powerful enough to penetrate the 90 feet of rock that tops the steel roof of France's Aladdin's Cave, and not only that, but the danger of access to the vault being gained by tunneling was also foreseen and guarded against.

On every side the huge treasure chest of a nation is surrounded by water. When the engineers who built the stronghold made their survey for the site of the vaults, they discovered that subterranean river of the Grange Batellere and diverted its course into several tributaries that form a water jacket around the country's cash-box.

It took two years of labor by 1,200 men, working night and day, to carve out the setting in the living rock to accommodate the vaults, and the cost of construction is estimated at $5,000,000.

Since their completion in 1927, a steady stream of gold has flowed into their hungry maw from other countries, particularly the United States and Germany, and the accumulation of precious metal is steadily growing. It is said that all France's gold travels one way—down to the vaults of the Banque de France.

That be as it may, one wonders what France will do with all the gold if, and when, she controls the world supply. Gold may be the life-blood of a nation, but any physician will tell you that blood, to be beneficial, must circulate. When it ceases to move and collects in one spot nothing but disaster can follow. So one is inclined to believe that it would be far better for a nation to suffer from a mild form of anaemia.
